

Chris Wise

Chris Wise, expert in the design and implementation of physical security components, has been in the security industry for the past 28 years. His background in physical security and systems integration combined with his background in starting, running, and successfully expanding his own security company gives Mr. Wise a unique perspective and set of skills as he moves on to the next phase of his career, the founding and start-up of Invictus Consulting, LLC.

Mr. Wise's experience in the corporate sector ranges from sales representative to regional sales director to general manager to director of a major national security firm. He is certified in a multitude of software management systems and has expert knowledge of access control, biometrics, surveillance, alarm systems, IP cameras, and CCTV. Mr. Wise has designed the layout of multiple corporate security management systems and specializes in systems integration.

Mr. Wise is perfectly situated to create a security consulting company. Not only did he rise up the ranks to the position of director in one of the leading national security companies, but he has also worked with many global companies, addressing their security needs. Mr. Wise put his corporate experience to good use when, in 2003, he built his own hugely successful security company from the ground up, expanding it to more than 30 locations nationwide. Having sold that business, Mr. Wise is now focusing his efforts on the consulting side of the security industry. He is applying his expertise in physical security components and his expertise in running a successful business to meet the increasing need for active shooter plans.